Department of Contemporary Turkish Dialects and Literatures

ABOUT US

During the four-year undergraduate education process in our department, students learn at least two of the principal dialects among the Kipchak, Oghuz, Chagatai and Siberian Turkish dialect groups, together with their language, literature, culture and history. In addition, elective Russian language courses are offered to enable students to communicate easily with the Turkic regions—particularly Russia—and to access relevant sources more effectively. A master's degree program in the Department of Contemporary Turkish Dialects and Literatures is also available for graduates who successfully complete their undergraduate education and wish to pursue an academic career.
